Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

Claims 1, 3-6, and 8-10 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over US Pat. 4681423 in view of US Pat. Appl. 2003/0174355 and US Pat. 6529696.

Referring to Fig. 5, 1:54-60 ("column:lines"), and 3:8-49, US'423 discloses a copier with a "first control processing" mode that initiates warm-up when placement of an original is detected.

US'423 does not disclose a "second control processing" mode that does not initiate a warm-up mode, but instead by a "copy operation instruction," a control unit that performs either the first or second "control processing" based on the mode set when the an original is detected (see par. [0064] etc.); nor does US'423 disclose determining the operating mode based on the history of usage.

Referring to paragraphs [0064]-[0070], US'355 discloses a "second control processing" mode – facsimile - that deactivates a warm-up mode, and initiates a "copy operation instruction" – a "normal mode, and the desired mode is set by the user before a "control processing" is executed." It would have been obvious to adapt the second mode of US'355, which deactivates the warm-up mode, to conserve energy during an outgoing facsimile transmission, when image fusing is not required. Since the determination of which of the processing modes is executed, when an original is detected, is determined by the mode set by the user beforehand, clearly US'355 alone discloses a "fixing unit [that] performs either one of the first... or second control processing based on the set operation mode when the original detection detects the set original," as claimed.

US'696 discloses, at Fig. 7 and col. 5, line 66, through col. 6, line 32, determining the operating mode based on the history of usage. It would have been obvious to determine the operating mode based on the history of usage, after the manner of US'696, since this would render the step of manually choosing the mode unnecessary most of the time.

A manual override (claim 9) simply retains the option to choose a mode at regardless of the automatic setting, which feature is virtually universal in diverse electronic devices. Claim 10 merely states that the mode executed is the mode set, which necessarily obtains in the operation of US'423 in view of US'355.

While US'423 does not explicitly disclose both manual and automatic mode selection (claim 5), the latter by detecting transmission, i.e. registering fax operation (claim 3), this does not patentably distinguish the claimed invention from the prior art. It would have been obvious to automatically disable the preheating mode during fax operation since preheating is then manifestly unnecessary. Claim 6 is met by control means that, when the device is turned on, retains the previous mode setting, which is conventional, and avoids the need to always select a mode when starting the device.

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments with respect to the claims have been considered but are moot in view of the new grounds of rejection.
